Sustainability Assessment

Integrating social and environmental aspects into your business and project plans, and assessing your success

Many financiers now require your organization or project to contribute to sustainability, with social (people), environmental (planet), and economic (profit) objectives. Aidenvironment helps you assess the social and environmental impacts of plans, investments and projects in less developed countries. We strengthen your plans and increase your capacity to assess them.

‘The challenge is to strike a balance between ‘do no harm’, ‘do more good’, and your organization’s core business.’

Aidenvironment looks at sustainability not just reactively (avoiding negative impacts), but also proactively by stimulating positive sustainability impacts. This means integrating sustainability into planning, operational and review processes. For this we have developed a framework and easy-to-use tools.

What we offer?
Our services guide and support the integration of sustainability objectives into the different stages of designing your business or project and planning your activities, and into due diligence checks on your processes. Our framework is based on the guidelines of the Millennium Development Goals (MDG), the International Finance Corporation (IFC), and the Organisation for Economic Corporation and Development (OECD).

To help you develop in-house expertise and sustainability assessment procedures, we offer a tailor-made workshop on international sustainability standards and measures to integrate these into your tenders, business models and projects.

We can also advise you on how to organize assessments efficiently and, if desired, we will carry out the actual assessments of sustainability risks, opportunities and impacts.

‘Making sustainability ambitions work in practice requires user-friendly and reliable sustainability assessment tools and procedures.’
